The percentages are still not well calculated. 4.5% of 78.38 is 3.5. The website calculates it as 3.38. By the gods, be careful with this, an error of a few cents, multiplied by many cases, becomes a lot of money lost.

When you cancel a lesson with the teacher, and the teacher confirms it, if you want to rebook a lesson on the same day, at the same time (which is now free), the website gives you a warning that the time slot is already taken, and that you must, if you wish, choose another time.

This is the email that the teacher receives with the booking (he lives in the USA).

The person who chooses the time is the time that appears in the emails and in the booking tables.

As you can see in the screenshots, the student from Spain books from 19:00 to 20:00, and the teacher in the USA also receives the same time in the email notification.

On the other hand, if the teacher in the USA changes the class time from his profile, the student in Spain receives the message and the information in his profile with the USA timetable.

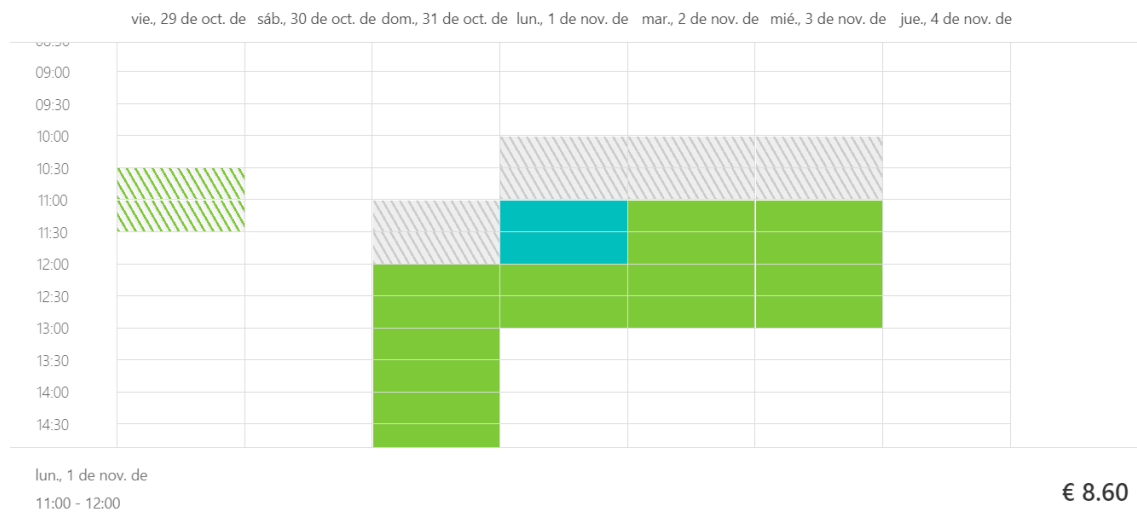

Extra: We need the information of the day to appear as well, not only the time.

On the other hand, if the teacher changes the time, the student must confirm the time change. If it is not confirmed within 12 hours, the class will be cancelled.

Regarding class confirmation, classes will be auto-confirmed 48 hours after the end of the class.

WARNING: We have not tested this, but I remind you that NO timetable changes can be made either by the teacher or by the student, when there are 24 hours left for the class.

The calendar does not work on the time slot issue. Right now, as it is set up, if someone books from 19:00 to 20:00, then no one could book from 20:00 to 21:00, because the 20:00 slot is already occupied. So we have thought of two options:

How the competition has it. The timetable is divided into 30-minute slots (in the picture a one-hour class is chosen).

Or, the second option, is to choose a single slot in our calendar, so that if you choose to have a 19:00 class, you can see the 20:00 free and book it.
